PROCEEDINGS SMITH.-J. G. Blackwell.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 8, 1869.

Pursuant to eall of Executive Committee of the National Republican Party of the State of Mississippi, a very large gathering of the people of the State, assembled this day in the Hall of the House of Representatives of Jackson.

The Convention was called to order at 12 o'clock, by C. A. Fisk, Chairman of said Executive Committee, who read the call under which Convention met.

After the reading of call, Mr. Fisk remarked that the Convention was composed of members of all former political organizations—that they had met for the common good of all, and he eloquently expressed the hope that they would move on to the achievement of victories such as were achieved in Virginia and Tennessee. (Applause.)

During the absence of Committee, the Hon. E. Jeffords, and Messrs. Williams and ed for the exercise of the purest patriotism.
We were now called upon to forget the things of the past, and to act for the everliving present. The Convention had a great work before it. He referred to the fact that although war had ceased four years ago, the citizens of Mississippi are ruled to-day by the iron hand of martial law; that the people are practically without law. It was high time that the people of Mississippl were per-mitted to rule over their own affairs—that on to meet Gen. Alcorn in discussion vening. THE REFORM OF REDRESS. Dr. W. F. Channing's Views-The Dress should Fit the Figure—All Women should Dress like Swiss Peasants—No More Stove-pipe Hats.

[From the Revolution.] The art of dress must be founded on naure. We may assume, without fear of conlican party of the State of Mississippl, and their peculiar fitness and appreciation of the rights of citizenship.

By Mr. Smythe, of Adams:
Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention be tendered the past Executive Committee for their actions. tradiction, that the dress must have sleeves, or at least apertures for the arms. It would seem to be almost an equally self-evident proposition that the lower part of the dress should be bifurcate, and recognize nature's endowment of the human species with legs.

As regards the mechanical principles of dress, it should obviously fit closely where there is greatest motion, especially the limbs as you approach the hands and feet. But, while the hands may often be sufficiently disengaged to allow the ornament of drapery sleeves, this is never possible for the feet, when in use. It will be found by experiment that any loose clothing below the serious impediment to locomotion. As fit-ness prescribes beauty, the pantalette about

In the same manner the masculine pantaloon of the present day, loose below the knee, is an obstruction to motion, as well as untidy, wasteful, and a deformity. The present loose leggin and detestable mascuine boot must ultimately be replaced with gaiters and shoes, or close-fitting boots, for reasons of economy, efficiency, or elegance. No female costume is more beautiful in

"Wednesday was Madame Demorest's annual opening day. To the surprise of novices in these scenes, it is found, that instead of dresses, the only exhibition is of paper patterns. Decapitated body frames, with most engaging waists, are covered with tissue paper dresses of multiform hues, flounced, bordered, trimmed and cloaked; big pasteboard suggestions of small girls with curly hair and immense legs are hung from the ceiling, bedizened in pink, rose and blue; male juveniles of similar material, in endless fantastic costumes, hang as a study for fond mamas; and many colored sleeves, variously bedecked, are suspended around, kindling startling visions of amputation. Sweet things in bonnets, all in tissue paper, lie on the mantelpiece, accompanied by minute hats; and, dotted at different points upon the walls are found notices of various
